Run 2597

On the corner of Campbell and Hughes Street, the Townsville Hash House Harriers gathered at SERENITY and SCISSORS' place for their Monday night run, donning dashes of green to kick off the upcoming Saint Patrick's Day festivities.

Runners and walkers gather in St Paddy's outfits, ready to follow the mischievous trail laid by the hares through parks, streets, and scenic waterfronts of Hermit Park.

Just as the run was about to begin, a couple of returning hashers, SWAMP and REEFER made a surprise appearance, bringing a wave of dread, excitement and nostalgia to the group.

The run took us over the old dump, now Bicentennial Park, where DUNNY pointed out all the historical sites he used to play at when Robert Towns left him behind in Townsville. Not to be outdone, SERENITY conducted a real estate showing of all the houses worth millions, but which turn into submarines any time the Ross River wants to jump over its banks.

After a reasonable distance, we arrived at the place where the drink stop was supposed to be, but HERCULES was more interested in doing laps of Corcoran Park. We finally caught her only to be given some green lolly-type water, which would later become the infamous down-drink for the night.

With drinks in hand, hashers headed home for a couple of GUINNESS'S or a beer of their choice, wrapping up the evening in true Saint Patrick's Day style.

The GM called the circle into order, launching into a lively round of charges and icings in response to the mass confusion caused last week by some misplaced property.

Amid laughter and playful banter, hashers were singled out for their involvement, making the proceedings both entertaining and a memorable highlight of the night.

Not to be outdone, BLOWBACK, for reasons known only to them, decided it was time for a self-imposed icing, prompting a ripple of amusement throughout the group.

Perhaps it's time for the club to investigate the curious connection between dementia and hashers, after all, misplaced property and spontaneous charges seem to be recurring themes!

Meanwhile, INN BREAD handed over the infamous Prick of the Week shirt to some poor, undeserving soul, who hadn't put a foot wrong all year!!

Not to be outdone, "JUSTBRAD/NOT GARRY" cheerfully passed the Erectus onto a decidedly not-so-virgin runner or walker. "We Beat the Runners in!" a competitive phrase that might just come back to haunt a certain group next week.

PICK UP was named Sergeant of Arms for the evening. Wasting no time, she delivered a series of rapid-fire charges to some deserving souls and then boldly called upon all those of Irish descent to step forward for a celebratory drink. The resulting outpouring of spirited participants quickly escalated the gathering into utter chaos, revealing that, unbeknownst to many, there was quite a bit of mischievous Irish blood running through the club.

The raffles were drawn and winners were suitably cursed, marking the closing of the circle.

As silence descended upon the club, plates were filled and food was consumed, bringing a sense of contentment to all. Once fully satisfied, the hashers slowly disappeared into the night, only to reappear next week for another round of mischief and camaraderie.

Well done SCISSORS and SERENITY.
