Run 2601 – Thing Big, Dringo, Slash & Azaria

On a suspiciously well-organised Monday evening, the legendary Hash Run #2601 kicked off at the prestigious grounds of 12 Hopkins Street. The course had been carefully (or questionably) set by the trio of El Drango, Slash, and Azaria—a combination known for equal parts adventure and confusion. Meanwhile, the promise of “tasty nosh” from Think Big kept morale high before a single step was taken.

With minimal ceremony and maximum enthusiasm, Slash sent the pack off into the unknown. Spirits were high, legs were fresh, and at least a few people were pretending to understand the trail markings.

Adding to the excitement, the runners were joined by a virgin—proudly presented by Cat Blew—who was about to learn very quickly what they had gotten themselves into. Meanwhile, the trotters attempted a more “relaxed” pace, only to be absolutely shown up by Little Mercedes, who clearly missed the memo about taking it easy.

Eventually, the pack limped, wandered, and miraculously navigated their way back to the trailer, where cold drinks awaited and stories immediately became far more impressive than reality. Distances grew longer, hills steeper, and athletic performances borderline heroic.

The GM called the circle to order (or something resembling it), and JM took on the noble task of pouring drinks... though “pouring” might be generous, as he stumbled his way through the job. Special attention was given to the virgin runner, who received an extra-large initiation beverage—because nothing says “welcome” like questionable hydration choices.

Grass Hole was then ceremoniously sent off for his birthday, serenaded with the traditional Hash birthday song—loud, proud, and only slightly in tune.

In a moment of great honour (or mild confusion), Copit awarded the prestigious POW shirt to Twitter, proving once again that anything can happen in the circle.

Entertainment for the evening was bravely attempted by Benta Beak, who delivered one of his jokes to the pack. Reactions ranged from polite laughter to outright concern—but effort was definitely awarded.

The raffles were drawn next, producing results that can only be described as “widely unpopular,” though this did nothing to dampen the spirits (or at least not the drinking of them).

With the formalities wrapped up, the circle came to an end, and the long-awaited nosh was served, followed by dessert—because nothing pairs better with running than immediately undoing it.

All in all, it was declared a great night... though details may vary depending on who you ask.
